“Don’t assume anything. Everyone has their own unique abilities that may not always fit into the pre-assumed gender roles. Give everyone, regardless of gender, male or female, the opportunity to shine. Don’t be afraid to go for it and to make opportunities where, due to assumed gender roles, they have not been before.”

I love learning and discovering new things. During my career I have had the opportunity to study many things, including the ability of plants to produce vaccines. I have also been a surveillance scientist for the HPSC and I’m now a Technical Officer in the School of Veterinary Medicine where I support pre-clinical teaching in biochemistry and anatomy and research into discovery of novel drugs. In passing on knowledge and supporting students to develop new skills and understanding, I also learn a lot from the students! I help run the UCD Vet Vegetable Community Garden which last year raised money for the charity Children in Hospital Ireland who provide a much needed play service for children in hospital.
