UCD School of Veterinary Medicine

“Listen to your sister, your mother, your partner, your colleague, your student – for she has wisdom, experience and a view of the world that has not yet been heard.”

I am Full Professor of Veterinary Microbiology and Parasitology at the School of Veterinary Medicine. From 2007 to 2016 I was the first female Dean of Veterinary Medicine, and worked to ensure the current position of the school as a leading international player in veterinary education and research. During my tenure UCD's MVB degree received initial (2007) and renewed (2014) accreditation from the American Veterinary Medical Association Council on Education. I currently lead an active research group and have a number of administrative responsibilities including serving as UCD's Research Integrity Officer. I greatly enjoy advancing the One Health paradigm through my work on how parasitic worms can both help and hinder the health of the host and seeing a new generation of veterinary scientists break barriers in this domain.
